The government on Thursday announced a ban on exporting rice to Australia and South Korea to reduce the chances of the rice, commonly called Asian rice, spreading in those countries. It will halt exports to Canada, the European Union, Japan, Taiwan, the US, the UK and parts of the Middle East from this month, according to a notice from the country's commerce ministry. "This is done to avoid any chance of the rice diseases spreading into these countries,” said Commerce Minister Matia Chowdhury at a press conference on Thursday. “We will also ask our neighbours to do the same.” Asia’s three largest rice exporters, China, India and Bangladesh, together exported 4.4m tonnes of rice worth $16.5bn in 2017, according to the Bangladesh Rice Millers Association. The US, which is the world’s second largest rice importer, bought 2.7m tonnes of rice from the region last year. The Bangladesh authorities have confirmed the presence of the virus in affected rice fields. The Bangladeshi prime minister, Sheikh Hasina, has blamed the disease on foreigners working in a small area of south-eastern Bangladesh. She’s asked the authorities to keep an eye on all foreign workers in the area, and shut down any non-bangladeshi rice factories in the area if necessary. China, which is Asia’s biggest rice exporter, has refused to confirm that the virus is in its rice crops, but has pledged to remain vigilant. Bangladesh’s Foreign Minister Dipu 82157476af
